Wayne's Poem:

*To hear the old comrade's as they pass in years,
Remember their past conflicts and end up in tears.
To watch them party, as those that survive,
Vibing and Dancing, they're still alive.
We'll never know the horrors they have seen,
Doing their best was always their dream.
I've met some Old Timer's, as they come and go,
Always a smile and friendly hello.
How do you thank people you don't know,
Who fought for your freedom and slaying the foe,
And willing to die for the blessings we have,
Give thanks and remember the deed that they've done,
To give us our freedom and lives that we know.*
